Sighting of luminous object in sky

One week ago, in the vicinity of G and 20th, about 10 P.M. or a bit later, walking North on 20th just south of G, I suddenly saw ahead and seemingly about 150 to 200 feet high an object moving West or a bit NW at a moderate speed, so that by the time I walked a few steps it passed from sight over the George Washington University Law Building, seemingly on a slightly descending path. In a few seconds, I noticed several people on the corner and asked if they saw it but none had. But I walked to 21st and H and just to the north of that intersection asked a man sitting in front of a house if he had seen it and he said yes and he thought it was a shooting star. To him it had appeared to be to the southward of where he was sitting; so his and my views of it indicate it was quite low and about over the middle of the block between G and H and travelling north or NW. What makes it unusually interesting is that it appeared to me to be about the size of a football or a bit larger, glowing brightly with a pale green light, with a slight tail of orange color. Its descending path, to my eye, at such a definite angle that I would not have been surprised to have learned that it landed only a couple of blocks away but this was apparently illusory--seemingly high and not descending so steeply as I had thought.

I do not consider it to have been a mysterious object but thought it worth :
for your records.
